Supreme Court seeks investigation into judge's porn emails

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania released a statement Monday saying it would review of one of the judges on its bench who allegedly received pornographic and racist emails, saying they were "disturbed" by the emails.

Emails to Justice Michael Eakins' personal email account were included in a file of pornographic emails Attorney General Kathleen Kane sent to the court recently.

The Judicial Conduct Board is now investigating Eakins, and the court has hired a private law firm to investigate him as well.

Justice Seamus McCaffery retired after it was revealed that he was included in some of these email exchanges.

Arrest made in slaying of trans woman

One of a group of suspects was arrested Sunday.

Police say they have arrested a 24-year-old man in connection with the Oct. 6 murder of a transgender woman.

Pedro Redding, of the 4500 block of N. 13th St., was arrested Sunday morning in the death of Kiesha Jenkins after police received a tip about a group of men who were robbing people in the area.

Jenkins, who may have been working as a prostitute, was beaten by a group of four men after getting out of a car at about 2:30 a.m. at 13th and Wingohocking.

"It's not a hate crime at all," said Philadelphia Police Capt. James Clark. "It had everything to do with the fact that she had money and they wanted to take it."

The 22-year-old victim was shot in the back and pronounced dead just before 3 a.m.

Redding has four prior arrests for drugs, aggravated assault, robbery and firearms violations, according to authorities.

He was arrested in 2012 for robbing a transgender woman. Those charges were dropped when the victim failed to appear in court.

Clark said Redding is providing information police believe will lead to the arrest of the other suspects.

The area where Jenkins was killed was known for having a brisk prostitution trade, police said. After the murder, cops detained five or six women working in the area, who told officers of other robberies, not all of which were reported to police.

Fitzpatrick said that regardless of whether Jenkins was working as a prostitute, she didn't deserve to be killed.

"They don't deserve to be beaten down and gunned down in the streets," Fitzpatrick said.

"The victim was a prostitute in the area, but she had a very nice mother and grandmother." Clark

Protecting the SS United States as

The caretaker of the famed ship wishes more people cared.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

Close your eyes for a moment and imagine the S.S. United States — that's the hulking, 300-yard-long cruise ship that has sat across from the Ikea on Columbus Boulevard for nearly 18 years.

Now imagine what you think the guy whose job it is to take care of it looks like.

Peacoat? Knit cap? Weathered face that moves only to scowl and take pulls off cigarettes?

Wrong.

The caretaker of the S.S. United States is an enthusiastic 30-year-old man who over the past eight years has come to consider himself honored to work there.

"I can run up and down the S.S. United States, but I stumble going up the stairs in my apartment," said Ray Griffiths, who used to eat his lunch on the top of the ship's giant stacks.

The S.S. United States was built as a cruise ship that could be quickly converted into a troop carrier. Its massive engines — their true capabilities were classified during the Cold War — pushed the ship toward a record-breaking three-and-a-half-day Atlantic crossing during its maiden voyage in 1952. But it was used for only 17 years; it was taken out of service as plane travel became faster and less expensive.

"I don't want it to be forgotten. It's amazing how many people care."

Gibbs

For decades, the S.S. United States was kept in Norfolk, Va., where it passed between owners. Its fixtures, furniture and art were auctioned off. One owner moved it to Philadelphia, where it was eventually acquired by Norwegian Cruise Lines. After the company's plan to restore the ship was abandoned, it was acquired by the S.S. United States Conservancy in 2011, which has struggled to find a developer to retrofit her into a mixed-use property.

Griffiths said part of his job entails keeping the ship tied securely to the dock.

"If you get it wrong, the ship will move around a lot and start ruining things," Griffiths said.

There are mundane tasks — making sure rainwater flows off the deck properly — and complex ones. When he started, the ship listed a bit. He pumped tanks to right the ship. He can talk at length about exploring the lower decks to document aspects of the ship that had been lost.

Griffiths recently gave tours to media interested by news that the conservancy could sell the ship for scrap if it does not raise enough to pay the $60,000 a month it needs to maintain the ship.

Griffiths' tours are filled with a reverence that he's picked up from the historians, engineers and enthusiasts he's met on the job.

It's not work for the faint of heart. There are heights and cramped, dark spaces. He's escorted a few engineers who have had second thoughts about the danger.

"When I take people on board, I say, 'You need to be honest if you can't do this,'" Griffiths said.

He got his start in the maritime industry at 17, handling logistics for the cruise industry. He did a stint in a trade school for auto mechanics.

But mostly, he's learned on the job.

"He follows in the tradition of the designer of the ship," said Susan Gibbs, executive director of the conservancy. She should know — Gibbs is the granddaughter of Francis Gibbs, the self-taught naval architect who designed the S.S. United States.

Griffiths heads a three-person team that works on board about one or two days a week. But big storms can change that schedule.

Gibbs said it's been interesting watching the trio — they're all about the same age — learn about the ship's history.

"They're all young men who have fallen in love [with the job], and the ship is doing great," Gibbs said.

Jersey City next to legalize Airbnb?

The city could legalize the room rental service.

The mayor of Jersey City, N.J., said Monday his city could become the first in the New York City tristate area to legalize short-term housing rentals through Airbnb and similar online home-rental services.

Under a measure introduced by Mayor Steven Fulop, Jersey City could raise as much as $1 million in revenue annually because Airbnb agreed to be responsible for charging and collecting the city's standard 6 percent hotel tax.

"While some people might have concerns about the sharing economy upending old ways of doing business, the best way to address those concerns is by engaging with these companies, not pretending they do not exist," Fulop said.

The Jersey City city council is expected to consider the proposal Wednesday.

The additional money would represent a 14 percent increase in Jersey City's annual hotel tax revenue, according to a statement from Fulop.

While a number of U.S. cities have officially allowed rentals through the popular website, other major cities — including neighboring New York — have cracked down on illegal use of the service.

Even in Airbnb's hometown of San Francisco, a proposed law on the November ballot would limit the use of homes as hotels through services such as Airbnb. Backers of the initiative contend Airbnb exacerbates the city's brutal housing shortage.

But Max Pomeranc, Airbnb's regional head of public policy, said in the statement the new law "would generate more revenue for Jersey City and help countless families who share their homes and use the money they earn to pay the bills." REUTERS

- In Philadelphia, Airbnb hosts are required to pay an 8.5 percent tax on their profits.
- Those taxes go to city tourism agencies.

U.S. airmen prepare to drop supplies. GETTY IMAGES

US forces airdrop ammunition to Syrian Arab rebels

Last week, Washington shelved a program to train and equip "moderate" rebels opposed to Assad who would join the fight against Islamic State.

U.S. forces have carried out an airdrop of small arms ammunition to Syrian Arab rebels in northern Syria, barely two weeks after Russia raised the stakes by intervening in the war on the side of President Bashar al-Assad.

A U.S. military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said on Monday the airdrop of supplies to the opposition fighters was part of a revamped U.S. strategy announced last week to help rebels in Syria battling Islamic State militants.

The only group on the ground to have success against Islamic State while cooperating with the U.S.-led coalition is a Kurdish militia, the YPG, which has carved out an autonomous zone in northern Syria and advanced deep into Islamic State's stronghold Raqqa province.

On Monday, the YPG announced a new alliance with small groups of Arab fighters, which could help deflect criticism that it fights only on behalf of Kurds. Washington has indicated that it could direct funding and weapons to Arab commanders on the ground who cooperate with the YPG.

Syrian Arab rebels said they had been told by Washington that new weapons were on their way to help them launch a joint offensive with their Kurdish allies on the city of Raqqa, the de facto Islamic State capital.

Russian intervention unpopular

The Russian intervention in Syria has wrongfooted the U.S. administration of President Barack Obama, which has been trying to defeat Islamic State while still calling for Assad's downfall.

After joining the four-year-old war in Syria, an attempt by President Vladimir Putin to win over opponents of Russia's bombing campaign was snubbed on Monday, with Saudi sources saying they had warned the Kremlin leader of dangerous consequences and Europe issuing its strongest criticism yet.

Putin met Saudi Defense Minister Mohammed bin Salman on the sidelines of a Formula One race in a Russian resort on Sunday.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said on Monday that those talks, along with discussions with the United States, had yielded progress on the conflict, although Moscow, Washington and Riyadh did not agree in full "as yet."

But a Saudi source said the defense minister, a son of the Saudi king and one of the chief architects of its regional policy, had told Putin that Russia's intervention would escalate the war and inspire militants from around the world to go there to fight. REUTERS

Dentist not charged for killing lion

Dentist and trophy hunter Dr. Walter Palmer GETTY IMAGES

Zimbabwe said Walter Palmer's hunting papers were in order, and could not be charged.

Zimbabwe will not charge American dentist Walter Palmer for killing its most prized lion in July because he had obtained legal authority to conduct the hunt, a cabinet minister said Monday, angering conservationists.

Palmer, a big-game hunter from Minnesota, touched off a global controversy when he killed Cecil, a rare black-maned lion, with a bow and arrow outside Hwange National Park in Western Zimbabwe.

"We approached the police and then the prosecutor general, and it turned out that Palmer came to Zimbabwe because all the papers were in order," Environment Minister Oppah Muchinguri-Kashiri told reporters.

Muchinguri-Kashiri said Palmer would be free to visit Zimbabwe as a tourist in the future but not as a hunter. The implication was that Palmer would not be issued hunters' permits.

The environment minister's comments immediately drew the ire of the animal conservation group Zimbabwe Conservation Task Force, which maintained that Palmer had committed a crime and said it planned to pursue legal action against him in the United States.

The 55-year-old dentist had closed his practice in late July after he was publicly identified as the hunter who killed Cecil, drawing widespread criticism on social media and a large demonstration by animal rights advocates at his office in Bloomington, Minnesota, a Minneapolis suburb.

The practice reopened in mid-August without him. Palmer returned to work in early September to a handful of protesters and some public support from patients. REUTERS

BRIEF

Pittsburgh officer's body slam of Cubs fan prompts investigation

The mayor of Pittsburgh has ordered an internal investigation after video of a police officer body-slamming a goat-costume-wearing Chicago Cubs fan at an Oct. 7 postseason baseball game against the Pirates at PNC Park circulated widely online.

A spokesman for Mayor Bill Peduto said the mayor saw the video Sunday night and immediately asked the city's office of municipal investigations, which conducts reviews of employee behavior, to look into the incident.

The video shows a police officer ordering a Cubs fan wearing a goat costume to leave. When the fan asks, "Can I talk to you?" the officer puts one arm around the back of his neck and walks him away, prompting the fan to yell, "Stop it!" and try to pry away the officer's arm. Someone appears to grab the phone being used to record the incident, yelling, "Put the phone down!" The video then cuts to another angle, which shows the officer picking up the fan and then body-slamming him to the ground before sitting on his back and cuffing him. The officer then pulls him to his feet and walks him away.

A police spokeswoman, Sonya Toler, declined to offer further details, including the name of the officer and whether the fan involved was arrested.

"This was just brought to our attention," she said. "We must investigate before anything is determined."

The website Sports Mockery posted a message it said was from the costumed fan, named Dmitri, who claimed the incident occurred after he was ushered away from his seat following a verbal confrontation with a Pittsburgh fan. REUTERS

Two others are already in it: Daniel Webster and Jason Chaffetz.

Bill Flores GETTY IMAGES

Another Republican stepped forward Monday to contend for the top job in the House of Representatives, laying claim to a post that others have so far found too hot to handle.

Texas Rep. Bill Flores will run for speaker of the House if his Wisconsin colleague, Rep. Paul Ryan, does not run for it, a spokesman for Flores said Monday.

"Congressman Flores is planning to run for speaker," Andre Castro said.

"However, if Congressman Paul Ryan runs, [Flores] will step aside and support him."

House Republicans have been in chaos since Speaker John Boehner's stunning Sept. 25 announcement that he would step down at the end of October.

His top lieutenant, Kevin McCarthy, was expected to seek the job, but suddenly backed out last week.

A third-term congressman who chairs the largest caucus of conservatives in Congress, Flores last week said House Republicans must find a leader who can unite the party's quarrelling moderates and right-wingers.

The 61-year-old Flores is a long-time energy industry executive. He was elected to Congress in 2010.

Last year Flores became chairman of the Republican Study Committee, a group of more than 170 conservatives, including two-thirds of House Republicans.

To become RSC chairman, Flores defeated two Tea Party favorites, Reps. Louie Gohmert and Mick Mulvaney.

Probe into allegations AB InBev seek to curb craft beer distribution

Bottles of beer make their way down the line inside the packaging plant for Anheuser-Busch in St. Louis. GETTY IMAGES Craft brewers have been a bright spot in an otherwise dull U.S. beer market.

The U.S. Justice Department is probing allegations that Anheuser-Busch InBev is seeking to curb competition in the beer market by buying distributors, making it harder for fast-growing craft brewers to get their products on store shelves, according to three people familiar with the matter.

In the past few months, the world's largest brewer has rattled the craft beer world by striking deals for five distributors in three states. Many states require brewers to use distributors to sell their product, and once AB InBev buys a distributor, craft companies say they find that they can't distribute their beer as easily and sales growth stalls.

Antitrust regulators are also reviewing craft brewers' claims that AB InBev pushes some independent distributors to only carry the company's products and end their ties with the craft industry, two of the sources said, noting that the investigation was in its early stages. AB InBev's purchase of several craft beer makers in recent years means that it is in a position to offer a greater variety of products itself.

The Justice Department review comes at an awkward time for AB InBev as it is seeking to buy No.2 SABMiller Plc for more than $100 billion in what would be the biggest-ever merger of brewers. AB InBev is widely expected to sell SABMiller's stake in U.S.-based MillerCoors if the merger goes through, leaving its U.S. market share unchanged at 46.4 percent.

BEER SALES ROSE 0.5 PERCENT IN 2014, CRAFT BEER SALES ROSE BY 17.6 PERCENT TO CAPTURE 11 PERCENT OF U.S. MARKET.

Small craft brewers have already been rattled by AB InBev's purchases of craft beer makers, including Golden Road in September, Blue Point Brewing in 2014 and Goose Island Beer Co in 2011.

As AB InBev also snaps up distributors, craft brewers have expressed concern that the company would push distributors to only carry its products.

To retain the craft title, a brewery must make less than 6 million barrels annually. That means those that get taken over by a big brewer like AB InBev lose that identity even if they still make small batches with distinctive flavors.

State regulators in California, where AB InBev announced wholesaler purchases in Oakland and San Jose in September, are also looking into the matter, the people familiar with the matter said. It was not clear if state regulators were looking at the recent purchases of two distributors in Colorado and one in New York as well.

The Justice Department declined comment. AB InBev, and the attorney generals' offices for California, New York and Colorado did not respond to requests for comment. REUTERS

Did Taylor kick Calvin to the curb?

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Of course you'd assume any Taylor Swift breakup rumor were true. It's Taylor Swift, after all. Radar Online has it on good authority that she called off her six-month relationship with Scottish DJ Calvin Harris because he patronized a Thai massage parlor last month. For two hours. Even though he has a masseuse on staff. The incident reportedly started Swift down a paranoid girlfriend spiral that culminated in her dumping Harris last week. "He lied to her. He gave some bulls— excuse that his masseuse was sick and he needed his shoulder worked on," a source says.

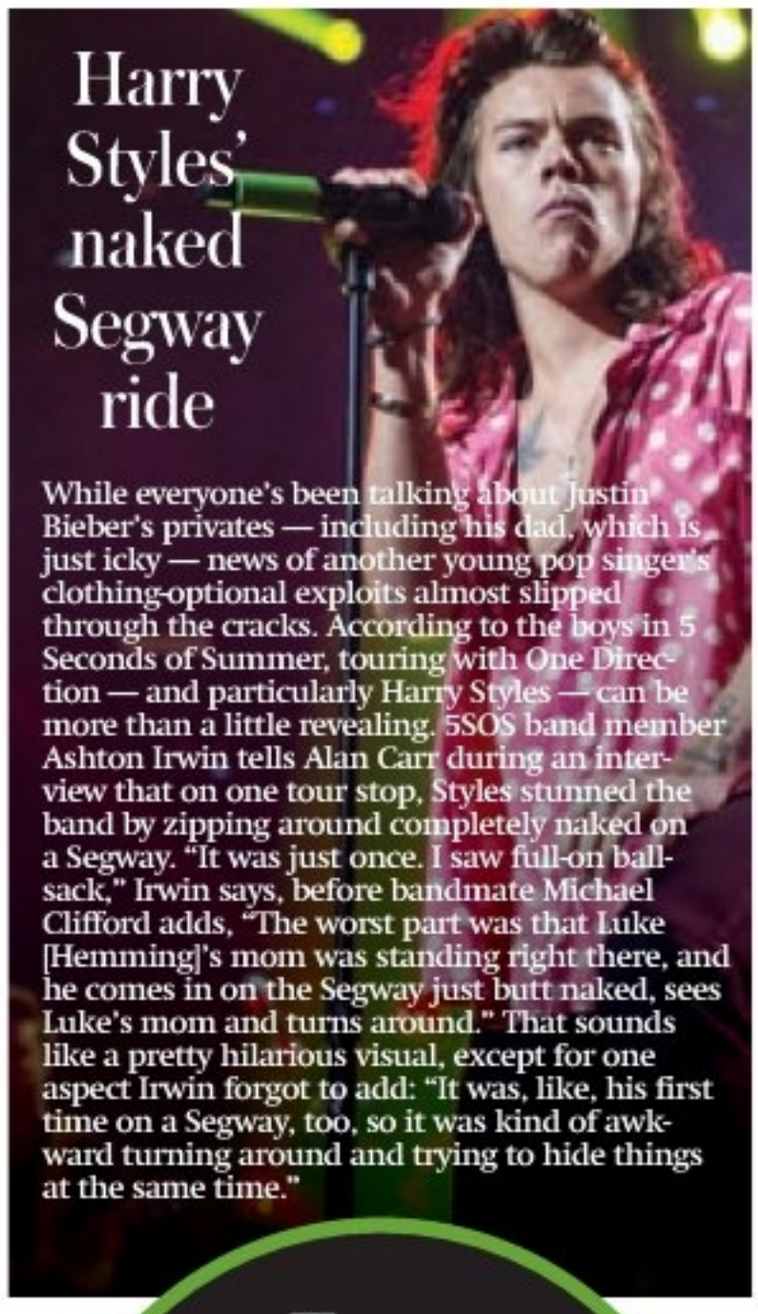
But! Get this: Swift's rep took to Twitter to deny the story, stating simply, "I've said it before and I'll say it again: Do not believe Radar Online." And even Swift herself struck back, tweeting — in response to a tweet by Harris she favorited — "Love isn't dead. I can sleep tonight." Which isn't exactly a denial, but still.

It's kind of too bad if it's not true, because how awesome would it be if her next big breakup-inspired album was called "No Happy Endings"?

Selena Gomez's last words on Justin Bieber

Selena Gomez is just about done with her press blitz to publicize her new album, which means she's also just about done having to give introspective and revealing interviews. But what could one more hurt? Gomez opens up to Refinery 29 about her relationship with Justin Bieber and the media glare around it. "I think people really wanted to see me fail. I'd sit down in an interview and get the most harshly asked questions. Of course I got my heart broken. Of course I was pissed about it. There, everybody has it. I was so disappointed, because I never wanted my career to be a tabloid story," she says. "At this point, there is no anger. There's closure in a very good, healthy way. We've seen each other. I'm always encouraging and I am proud of his journey. I think people are making it out to be something that is more tragic than it really was. We grew up together. We both made mistakes. That's it." So, we all good now?

Harry Styles' naked Segway ride



While everyone's been talking about Justin Bieber's privates — including his dad, which is just icky — news of another young pop singer's clothing-optional exploits almost slipped through the cracks. According to the boys in 5 Seconds of Summer, touring with One Direction — and particularly Harry Styles — can be more than a little revealing. 5SOS band member Ashton Irwin tells Alan Carr during an interview that on one tour stop, Styles stunned the band by zipping around completely naked on a Segway. "It was just once. I saw full-on ballsack," Irwin says, before bandmate Michael Clifford adds, "The worst part was that Luke [Hemming]'s mom was standing right there, and he comes in on the Segway just butt naked, sees Luke's mom and turns around." That sounds like a pretty hilarious visual, except for one aspect Irwin forgot to add: "It was, like, his first time on a Segway, too, so it was kind of awkward turning around and trying to hide things at the same time."

Taissa Farmiga scares

The "American Horror Story" actress gets to play the serious side of the funny "The Final Girls."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Taissa Farmiga, center, plays one of a group of teens who find themselves transported into a slasher movie in "The Final Girls," now on VOD. SONY

In "The Final Girls," Taissa Farmiga plays Max, a teen grieving for her dead mom, played by Malin Akerman. In truth, Malin is younger than Vera Farmiga, the "American Horror Story" regular's older sister and another actress who goes between drama and horror. Still, that factoid isn't as odd as the film itself: a comedic horror in which four young people find themselves sucked into a cheesy '80s slasher movie, a la "The Purple Rose of Cairo." And since the film-within-the-film starred Malin's character, that means Max, in a grim twist, gets to effectively once again spend time with her dead mother.

I heard you're not much of a horror fan. What is it about them that you don't jibe with?

They just scare me. I get scared very easily, even on set. You'll see crew members pat me on the shoulder, and I freak out. It's actually a joke on set. I was talking to my sister the other night, because she's doing "The Conjuring 2." And another friend of mine was talking about a horror script he's working on. It wasn't even an in-depth conversation; he just mentioned exorcisms. I woke up in the middle of the night, and I couldn't sleep. My brain was just running, and it was just a simple conversation. I have to overcome it somehow.

All this being said, "The Final Girls" isn't a straight-up horror movie. It's a comedy, while your character's arc could be airlifted into a more "serious" film and still be trenchant.

That's what I love about "The Final Girls." Yes, it has scary moments, and it can be called a horror movie. But it's also funny. It's also got a lot of heart to it. It was interesting to hear Todd [Strauss-Schulson], the director, speaking about it. He said it's a

Sisterly love

Malin Akerman, who plays your mom, is in fact younger than your older sister, Vera, and you've even played Vera's daughter in "At Middleton." That seems like a relationship that's both unusual and normal.

I come from a big family so I've grown up with adults. But I have a great relationship with Vera. There's an age gap, but as I've gotten older and entered the same field as her, that just means she has someone to talk to now — someone who understands when she says, "I was on set for 15 hours." She has a new person to go to. And she's always there for me. It's just a bunch of support from both ends. She opened me up to this world I had no idea I wanted to be in. She helped me find that. It's just a love fest; we all love each other.

And I'm sure she helps you with obstacles she has encountered.

Whenever I'm frustrated, I know she understands, and she can talk through things. My first movie, called "Higher Ground," she directed me in. I was nervous acting for my sister. It's not that I didn't want to disappoint her — I mean, I didn't. There are just so many expectations apart from her being a terrific actress.

mother-daughter story that deals with grief, but cloaked in a horror movie. When it comes down to it, it's just dealing with real situations and the real emotions we all feel.

Untangling the maze

"Labyrinth" popped up as part of Mural Arts' "Open Source."

MADELINE PRESLAND AND RACHEL VIGODA
letters@metro.us

The chain-link fence in Thomas Paine Plaza, right across from City Hall, isn't a barrier left over from the pope's visit. The fence, set up in a 40 x 40-foot maze, is a temporary installation from L.A.-based artist Sam Durant, created as part of the Mural Arts Program's series "Open Source: Engaging Audiences in Public Places."

Each artist involved in "Open Source" worked with a Philly community to explore a social issue, culminating this month in site-specific installations like Durant's "Labyrinth," which comments on the jumbled maze of the criminal justice system. Banners with relevant messages hang on the fencing; passersby are invited to walk through the maze and contribute their own messages with photos or artwork.

We talked to Durant about the message behind the installation.

How does "Labyrinth" talk about mass incarceration?

It was the result of a yearlong collaboration with a group of prisoners at the Graterford State Prison. That's where the idea for a labyrinth came from — once a person get into the criminal justice system, it's very difficult to get out. The public component is using the labyrinth structure itself as a gallery space for people to put up their own images, representations, memorials and mementos of mass incarceration.

What were the first things hung up on it?

The first were two paintings by the guys in Graterford Prison. Hopefully this will also be a space for [more prisoners] to show their artwork. But that's incidental in a sense — it's a public square.

ALL PHOTOS BY STEVE WEINIK FOR THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA MURAL ARTS PROGRAM

How does the location contribute to the message?

If you think about Thomas Paine and his role in American history and the things he fought for, the big one was free speech and the right to free expression. There's a nice symmetry between the space and my work — that it's a place for public speech. I would hope that Paine would approve. We don't like all things that people have to say, and that's part of the struggle of the freedom of speech.

Meet the artist

Hear Durant talk about the project and mass incarceration at "Unwinding the Labyrinth," Saturday from 2-4 p.m. at PAFA ($15, 118 N. Broad St.)

Durant will be joined by Timothy Phillips, co-founder of Beyond Conflict; Maria Gaspar, founder and lead artist of "96 Acres"; and filmmaker Darius Monroe. "Open Source" curator Pedro Alonzo will moderate the discussion.

Can you guess the 10 music videos to get over 1 billion views on YouTube?

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

Need further proof that YouTube is taking over? The media giant, owned by Google, revealed data showing that billion-plus video views are happening more often and faster than ever. Last year, only two videos had ever reached the billion-views mark. In 2015, there have been eight — and it's happening in a shorter time span.

Last week, Wiz Khalifa's "See You Again" video became the 10th video to get more than a billion views, and it happened in just 184 days, making it the second-fastest video to hit the mark. (The fastest over all was "Gangnam Style.")

Curious as to which videos racked up the most views? See the full list below:

Fashion Month report

The Spring 2016 fashion shows went in — and out — with a bang. We analyzed the countless runways from New York, London, Milan and Paris and distilled the trends you need to know.

TINA CHADHA AND RAQUEL LANERI
letters@metro.us

Designers certainly didn't call it in this fashion month. From the bravura of Riccardo Tisci's 9/11 memorial show — which kicked off New York with a chanting monk and Marina Abramovic — to Alexander Wang's 10-year anniversary bash — complete with pole dancers — spring 2016 was all about showmanship.

That fearlessness was echoed in the maximalist clothing that came down the runway, which included eye-popping prints, feminine frills and Latin flare.

"There's been a change," noted designer Rebecca Taylor during an appointment to view her "unapologetically beautiful" spring collection of geometric lace dresses and dreamy floral prints.

"Fashion went through a really austere time, and women are really ready for more."

In addition to these bold styles, we've rounded up the biggest trends that dominated the spring runways, from the audacious to the office-ready.

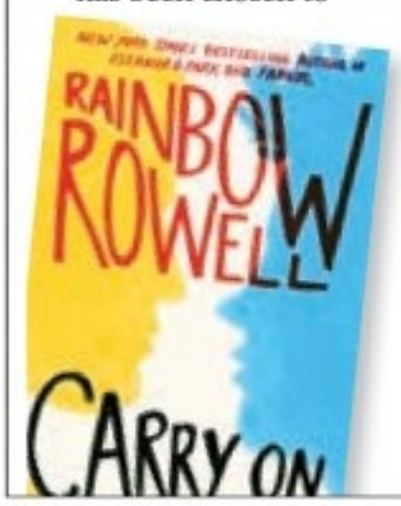
Rainbow Rowell brings fan fiction alive in 'Carry On'

The best-selling YA author tackles her first full-on fantasy novel.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Rainbow Rowell's new novel "Carry On" is out now. AUGUSTEN BURROUGHS

Readers of all ages have devoured Rainbow Rowell's books, including "Eleanor & Park," but instead of sticking to what works, Rowell is experimenting with a whole new genre: fantasy. Her latest book, "Carry On," is about a teen named Simon (a character from her book "Fangirl"), who has been chosen to fight a battle he seems ill-prepared to wage. Rowell gives us more scoop here.



What sparked the idea to give Simon Snow from "Fangirl" his own book?

When I started writing "Fangirl," writing the Simon Snow bit was a huge experiment for me since it was fan fiction, but I enjoyed writing it. I thought it would be fun to actually write these characters and not just through the lens of other characters.

What goes into creating a successful fantasy world?

To me, what makes it successful is the consistency. That said, if the characters are strong enough and the story is compelling enough, you can take the readers anywhere. When you think really hard about "Harry Potter," there are things that don't make sense, but since the characters are strong [fans] go with it.

Many people have created fan fiction based on your books. Did that change the way you wrote "Carry On"?

I don't look at any fan fiction at all for that reason. If I'm still working on something, I don't want someone to get in my head. But I do think it's pretty cool and flattering that people are writing fan fiction based on my books.

Why do you think YA is popular with adults as well as teens?

The teen years are an incredibly popular time in our lives and is a vital part of shaping our personalities. ... But it also goes by really quickly and you don't have time to process it. So it seems natural to me that when you're 25, 35 or 45 to want to go back and think about it.

"Eleanor & Park" is getting turned into a movie. How far along is the process?

I've finished two drafts of the screenplay. But the movie isn't my baby, the book is. My hope is that the studio finds a director who has a great vision and just runs with it.

How to make the most of a fitness class subscription

A professional trainer and a happy customer share their tips for getting the best bang for your gym-hopping buck.

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

There are hundreds of gyms and boutique studios in the city, and class subscription services like ClassPass and FitReserve are capitalizing on giving fitness buffs the chance to sample them all. These services will definitely save money over signing up for individual classes, but they still aren't cheap, especially if you don't want to let go of your gym membership. So, how can you really get your money's worth? We talked to a personal trainer and one satisfied customer to get their insider tips.

1 Find out what your body needs

It's tempting to sign up for the trendiest workouts you've been dying to try, but Don Saladino, a trainer based in New York City who counts Ryan Reynolds as one of his clients, says it's important to do a fitness screening first.

"A lot of people hop into classes like SoulCycle and come back [with an injury]," he says. To avoid getting hurt, reach out to a trainer and ask for a screening. Many will do it for free if they know it's because you want to go to a class. If not, it's worth using one of your passes for the session. Then you can do any needed corrective exercises at home and sign up for the classes you want without worrying that the workout will be too much for your body.

2 Tailor it to your schedule

Life's Better In Yoga Pants blogger Lynette Pettinicchi is a member of FitReserve and says the very act of signing up for a class keeps her committed to working out. "I miss more [workouts] on my own than I do with FitReserve classes," she says.

But making it fit into your schedule is key. Her best tip: "For weekday morning classes, I look for studios with showers so I can head right to work after and don't have to go all the way home to get ready," she says. "Then, on the weekends, I sign up for classes near my apartment in Astoria." Make things easy on yourself and you're more likely to stick with it and not cancel at the last minute.

3 Vary the intensity level

With so many classes to choose from, figuring out the best way to alternate them can be confusing. Should you do cardio one day, weights the next? What about yoga?

Saladino has the formula that will work best for your body: "Vary it by intensity level," he says. "Start with low intensity, the next workout do medium, the next workout go high, then medium again, working your way down." Break down the type of workouts you like to do — such as Pilates, aerobics or a weight-based class — into those categories and make your class schedule accordingly.

4 Keep your goal in mind

While you're experimenting with different classes and switching up the intensity level, Saladino says it's important to keep your fitness goal in mind so you're really getting what you want out of your subscription. "If your goal is to tone your abs, sign up for all the different type of classes you want, but three days a week should be classes focusing on resistance training," he says. "That's really going to be what transforms your body."

5 Do it with a friend

While Pettinicchi, who lives in New York, says she goes to most of her FitReserve classes alone because she and her friends all have crazy schedules, there's one class they love to do together: boxing. "I love to go to Overthrow in NoHo with my friends," she says. "It's a grungy underground boxing studio and just a ton of fun." When your workout is also a time to catch up with your friends, you're more likely to stay committed — and also to look forward to it.

How they compare

ClassPass
Price: $125 a month
Catch: Subscribers can take only three classes at each studio a month.

FitReserve

Catch: If you don't make it to a class you signed up for, it will cost you $20.
Cancellation policy: Varies by studio from six to 24 hours in advance; $15 fee

The liquid gold that prevents breast cancer

More evidence that the Mediterranean diet is the way to health.

Could olive oil be the most healthful fat? ISTOCK

Experts have long recommended regular exercise, drinking water and eating well to prevent the onset of breast cancer.

Now, you can add olive oil to the list.

In a study of older women published in the medical journal JAMA, Spanish researchers found that eating a Mediterranean-style diet supplemented with extra olive oil helped reduce the risk of breast cancer.

The Mediterranean diet typically includes fruit and vegetables, lean protein like fish and poultry, whole grains, legumes, nuts and a good bit of olive oil.

For this study, scientists examined more than 4,200 Spanish women between the ages of 60 and 80 who were at high risk of developing heart disease. The women were divided into three groups.

One group was told to eat a Mediterranean diet, plus four daily tablespoons of olive oil, another to eat the same Mediterranean diet but with 30 grams of nuts instead of olive oil, while the final third cut down on their fat intake.

The original study was conducted between 2003 and 2009. After five years, the researchers checked back in with the women and found that the group instructed to eat the Mediterranean diet with olive oil had a 62 percent lower relative risk of developing breast cancer compared with women on the low-fat diet.

NANCY MACEDO, METRO WORLD NEWS

Why is Bradford better in the second half of Eagles games?

The stats don't lie: Sam Bradford has been leaps and bounds better in the second half this season.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

Sam Bradford now has nine career 300+ yard passing games. GETTY IMAGES

It would be a stretch to say there have been two Sam Bradfords for the Eagles this season.

Clearly the former Heisman trophy-winner is slowly getting more comfortable with the Eagles offense, with his teammates and with playing tackle football again after missing so much time to injury as a Ram over the last few seasons.

But in Sunday's 39-17 win over the Saints, a trend continued for the quarterback — one that has him looking like a lost puppy in the first half of games and like a Pro Bowler in the second.

Bradford completed 13 of 15 passes (including eight-consecutive completions to start the half) for 188 yards and one touchdown in the second half against the Saints. In the first he threw two interceptions and was just 19-for-30.

NUMBER OF EAGLES TO RECEIVE A TOUCHDOWN PASS THIS SEASON, MORE THAN THE TEAM HAD IN 2014 (6).

"Maybe he just needs to see the looks a little bit more," Chip Kelly said Monday. "He settles down a little bit. I know he has been statistically — when you look at it, and he really has been better, but I think maybe he just gets settled a little bit more. That's probably a good question for him."

In all this season, Bradford has completed 66-of-94 passes (more than a 70 percent clip) for 753 yards and six touchdowns. In contrast to his season QB rating of 83.7, his second half rating is 102.0.

"See if we get a scrimmage going before it, a double header — He'd be great at a double header," the coach joked. "That would be awesome."

Sunday's turnaround for Bradford was different than in other games this season. In stark contrast to games against the Falcons, Cowboys and Redskins (when the Eagles could not get anything going and went three-and-out with great frequency), the Eagles were moving the ball very well in the first half against the Saints.

"At halftime, we had moved the ball, I think we had 300 yards of offense at halftime," Bradford said following his 333-yard performance Sunday. "I don't think they had stopped us once. I was stopping us throwing interceptions in the red zone. So we knew it was still out there, we knew we were still able to move the football on them. That really wasn't a problem, so I think at halftime we were still confident. And then to come out, I think we scored first drive out of halftime; that was big."

Bradford got over his two red zone interceptions and used a bevy of successful short passes, and a potent run game to shake off the demons that seem to haunt him early in games.

Any Phillies fan would know, Chase Utley is notorious for sliding hard to break up double plays. GETTY IMAGES

GLEN MACNOW: UTLEY SLIDE WAS 'DIRTY BASEBALL, NO QUESTION ABOUT IT'

THE SPORTS PROFESSOR

GLEN MACNOW
@RealGlenMacnow

The following statement may get me barred from the Chase Utley Wall of Honor celebration. But that slide that broke Ruben Tejada's leg Saturday night?

Dirty baseball, no question about it.

I know the Cro-Magnons among us (hello, Pete Rose) will rant that a man's game should not be sissified. But Utley's intent was purely to crash the pivot man and interfere with the fielder.

That's against the rules [5.09 (a)(13) if you want to look it up], and it knocked out a player not just for this postseason, but into 2016 as well. Utley's two-game suspension is justified.

Just as MLB changed the rules for bowling over catchers after Buster Posey's broken leg in 2011, they'll do the same for middle infielders this offseason. Bet on it. Tejada is the second shortstop to be maimed in the past month on a double-play pivot, following Pittsburgh's Jung Ho Kang.

Hey folks, it ain't a contact sport.

I love Utley for what he brought to the Phils over 13 years in both performance and style. The old cliché of "he plays the game the right way" was written for a heady, intense player like Utley.

But not here. While his takeout ultimately helped his team win, that's only because the umpires botched the moment. They should have cited interference and called a double-play. They were as wrong as Utley.

Immediately, there were calls for the Mets to settle the situation by going after Utley in the next game. As if a 95 mile-per-hour fastball to the ribs settles anything.

You may disagree. But, trust me, baseball's ridiculous code of unwritten rules isn't going to survive long into the future. And Utley's dirty play accelerated its extinction.

GLEN MACNOW: EAGLES FANS CAN REJOICE — FOR A FEW DAYS

OK, exhale. We can all breathe now. At least for another week.

Sunday's 39-17 win over New Orleans didn't prove much. But it kept the Eagles' season alive. In a must-win game, they saved themselves. At 2-3, they are in the thick of the NFC East race.

The Saints are too horrible to use as a measuring stick. Was this the start of a turnaround? We'll learn soon enough. So be impressed with 518 offensive yards and the reappearance of defensive line pressure. We'll need to see it again — and again — to know that Sunday's romp was not the aberration.

That said, there were plenty of aspects to savor Sunday.

Like the return of Big Balls Kelly. I've carped here that Chip had lost his swagger this season. On Sunday, he was aggressive, twice going for it on fourth and long. Neither play worked, but give the coach points for bravado.

Like Sam Bradford's best performance to date. Yes, he threw two hideous end-zone interceptions. No ignoring that. But Check-Down Sam is learning he can pass deep without fear, as well as overcoming the habit of throwing off his back leg. Bradford completed four passes of more than 20 yards, and had 333 yards total.

Sam Bradford has thrown for 603 yards and five touchdowns over the last two games. GETTY IMAGES

> "We played a complete game on offense. Obviously, we had some miscues in the red zone in the first half, but nobody really got down. We played with a big chip on our shoulder. We were 1-3 and we needed this win."
> Zach Ertz

There were also no sacks — in fact not one recorded hit on the Eagles quarterback, who did his postgame interviews in a uniform free of grass stains. The offensive line — beset by injuries — worked together brilliantly.

The offense played with a flow — if not for the entire four quarters, at least for most of the afternoon. Ryan Mathews again showed how well he fits Kelly's running scheme. Hell, even DeMarco Murray averaged more than four yards a carry.

On defense, Fletcher Cox played the best game of his career — ensuring election to this year's Pro Bowl. The front seven pounded Drew Brees all afternoon. And, with the exception of frequent target E.J. Biggers, the secondary shined.

So bask in the afterglow for a day or two. But know that the bottom line is that winning one must-have game just serves to set up another, and that comes next Monday night. If they beat the Giants at home, the Eagles will have fully emerged from the ditch they drove into to start the season. Then we can all exhale — and inhale again.

What's on tap

The Eagles will truly be tested in their next three games — but if they can navigate through this rough patch of prime-time games they could be in excellent position in the NFC East race.

PURSUANT TO THE LAND RECYCLING AND ENVIRONMENTAL REMEDIATION STANDARDS ACT, the Act of May 19, 1995, P.L. #4, No. 2 (Act 2), notice is hereby given that the Delaware River Waterfront Corporation is submitting a Final Report to the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection, Southeastern Regional Office, for the site known as Municipal Piers 31 through 35, located at 601 North Columbus Boulevard, City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (Site). Development plans include construction of a multi-story Commercial and Residential use structure at the site. The site is the former location of the East Central Incinerator. Some PAHs and some metals have been detected in soil; the presence of some PCBs in soil is inconclusive regarding exceedance of the soil to groundwater MSCs. No VOCs, or PAHs were detected in groundwater, however, the presence of some VOCs, PAHs, metals, and PCBs in groundwater is inconclusive due to laboratory reporting limits exceeding the Residential Used Aquifer MSCs. The Final Report provides the data to support a demonstration of attainment of Site Specific Standardsin soil by elimination of exposure pathways through engineering controls, and Statewide Health Standards for Groundwater through collection of quarterly groundwater attainment data. Comments should be submitted to the Department of Environmental Protection, Southeast Regional Office, Land Recycling/Cleanup Division, 2 East Main Street, Norristown, Pennsylvania 19401.
